A physician exammed the body and pronounced heartsteems the cause of death. A peculiarly sal feature of the case is that Mr. H—— was on his way to Maine, to settle in the home of his boyhood. He had passed the previous ten years in the western mining country, and had amassed a fortune. If YOU have eny of the symptoms given in the following testimonials you should lose no time in seeking relief. From John L. Roberts, Slatington, Pa. "I have suffered with polyidation, irregular pales, familiar and mathering spells, pain in shoulders, side, and arms for over forty years. For twelve years have been treated without avail by prominent physicians in my neigh-borhood and in New York. Growing constantly worse, smothering spells followed one another, so my life was often in danger and I needed constant care. As my son had been cured by Dr. Miles New Heart Care, he sent me three bottles. The first dose gave me instant relief. Before using the last bottle I was completely cured. Although seventy-fire years old I feel twenty years younger.

I claim my cure to be almost a miracle."
Here is a letter from Mrs. John Kolges, of Cleveland, O : "I had been troubled with my heart and stomach for years, but for sixteen menths had been confined to my bed. I had four of the best doctors in the city, but beart. I also had dropsy and rhounstien. I never took medicine that relieved me at once as Dr. Miles New Heart Cure does. I an much stronger. The stock market opened greatly depressed on the receipt of lower quotaions for securities from London. The failure of the Columbian bank of Chicago and of a small bank in Indianapolis, as well as of a banking and brokerage concern in Wilmington, Delaware, assisted the bears in their operation. Prices generally opened lower, and the pressure to sell continued for half an hour or so, After that time, however, a sharp rally ensued and the smaller shorts were badly trigatened. During the afternoon the marhet moved up and down frequently, but it was noticeable the declines brought in lib-eral buying orders, which left quotations higher after each attack. "But this is not the woman Smithers thought," I said to myself. Then I was puzzled.

You, of course, know all about my unhappy case?" she murmured, with a soft sigh which seemed to waft the fragrance nearer to where I sat drinking it in greedily. "Oh ves" I replied, hastily, telling a

You know how we were separated. Mr. Small," she continued excitedly; "that is if it be a separation for a cowardly wretch of a man to forsake his home and wife. The wretch! What do you think be said?" "I-er-really-"

"But my dear madam." I said as she beamed and sat gazing before her, beautiful and thoughtful, a most adorable woman when she was still; "you won your case-for the restitution of conjugal rights. "He stood there, outside the court, smiling, offered his arm, and led me to the carriage." "Come now, my dear madam," I cried; "the beginning of a most charming reconciliation." Was it?" she said, dryly. "Wait a bit. He handed me into the carriage. "And went away?"

"No; he jumped in, and said: "Home!" "Onite right." "Of course," she continued, "and I smiled at him as I sank back in the corner of the carriage. I am telling you because one speaks plainly to one's medical and legal advisers." "Then he sank back in his corner of the carriage, and smiled nicely at me. and he did look handsome, Mr. Small. It was as if we had just come from the church once more instead of from that hateful court; and as soon as we reached one of the retired streets, as he would not take any notice of my ungloved hand which I had placed on the seat between us where he could see it,

I threw myself upon his breast." "Very naturally," I said. "You are his wife!" "And what do you think the wretch said?"

Again I made a deprecatory gesture. "Oh, he made my blood boil again." she said, with a shiver of resentment "Don't do that, Petals,' he cried. pushing me away-Petals was my pet name, you know. He called me that, he said, because I was so blooming-'Don't do that,' he cried, 'this is a clean shirt, and I don't want it crumpled. We've just been washing all our dirty linen in public; now let's keep it clean." "Horrible!" Leteculated "Yes; and that's a specimen of his conduct ever since. He was obliged to take me home, and he has done so, and now he is trying everything he can do to make me sue for a divorce. But I won't. I'll have my rights. Oh! it's borrible. He will not get angry. He smiles at me before the servants, and calls me dering and dear, and goes out to dinner with me, and all our friends think we are quite reconciled; and all the time we are not reconciled a bit."

"But does he ill-use you?" I said, as she waited for me to speak. "Horribly! All this is before the servants and our friends. When we are alone he is nothing else but a cold smiling stone. He never utters a word unless I speak first, and no matter what I say to him he only smiles. If I am soving he smiles; if I grow angry -he smiles. "A most poinful and peculiar affair," I said "flut I might suggest, my dear madam that this is not a case for legal advisor, vois will excuse me?" Anrihing, if you will only make me happy once again."

My dear madam, the secret is in your own hands. Youth, beauty, a roice that would tame the savage beast I beg pardon-savage breast. But he bin't a savage beast," she cried. "If he were I could tame him and win him back. What good are have they on a cold, smiling marble?

Oh! if I could oute make him tealous!"

"Well, can't you?" I said. "No," she said naively. "I've tried, and he only smiles."

"Then I'm afraid, my dear madam that the law causet help you, without for some strong reasons the judge would grant a divorce."

"But I tell you I don't want a di-vorce," she cried, Sercely, "and I won't have one. Go through one of those horrible trials again? No; I'd sooner die!"

Then really, my dear mailam-"I tell you I want my husband, and I want him punished and taught that he's to obey the judge's order. Now, then, what is to be done?"

"Nothing, madam," I said, fire "We deal with the laws of the British empire, and the judge has gone as far he can; the rest remains with you Honorable Mrs. Ames rose, scated herself again, and tore off the damage glove, skinning it off one might may, and then operating upon the other and throwing the pair towards the waste-pater basket before taking a new pair out of her tiny reticule bac, and put-
